Fraunhofer IML to cooperate with Istanbul University

With the support of the Investment Support and Promotion Agency of Turkey (ISPAT), the Fraunhofer Institute for Material Flow and Logistics (Fraunhofer IML) and Istanbul University have signed a strategic cooperation agreement to work jointly on improving Turkey’s logistics industry through research and development in applied logistics.

The signature ceremony took place during a conference titled “Applied Logistics in Industry- University Collaboration,” held at Istanbul University’s Avcılar campus. The conference brought together industry representatives and academicians.

Addressing the participants at the conference, ISPAT Advisor Kemal Kafadar spoke of the crucial importance that logistics costs have for any industry and highlighted the increased use of technology in the Turkish logistics sector. “Recognizing the logistics sector as a strategic field that directly influences several other sectors, ISPAT supports investors with projects involving know-how and the transfer of technology. We are proud to have assisted Fraunhofer IML’s entry into our logistics sector and we know that this partnership will create substantial added-value thanks to the institute’s cooperation with Istanbul University,” Kafadar noted.

Expressing his gratitude for ISPAT’s assistance, Fraunhofer IML Director Prof. Michael Henke said that Turkey’s logistics sector had the potential to create added-value in other sectors. “Through collaboration with Istanbul University and manufacturing and logistics industry partners, Fraunhofer IML aims to bring new synergy and power to the Turkish logistics industry,” Henke remarked.

With its steadily growing, export-driven economy, Turkey has set goals for its 2023 centennial that include achieving an export volume of USD 500 billion, a GDP of USD 2 trillion, and the establishment of Turkey as a global logistics hub.
